Coverage: 1910–1975

To track the crusades and advancements of blacks in America, start here.

The Chicago Defender has been a leading voice of the black community well beyond the Windy City, with more than two-thirds of its readership outside Chicago. The newspaper was a proponent of The Great Migration, the move of over 1.5 million African-Americans from the segregated South to the industrial North from 1915 to 1925. It reported on the Red Summer race riots of 1919, and editorialized for anti-lynching legislation and the integration of blacks into the U.S. military. This newspaper also supported the aviation career of Bessie Coleman, the first African-American female pilot, and promoted the writing of Langston Hughes and Poet Laureate Gwendolyn Brooks.

Over six decades of this newspaper's historic coverage, online and easily searchable, for both researchers and readers, is available from ProQuest.

Illuminate history, online and cover to cover.

ProQuest is proud to play a role in preserving this historic newspaper for future generations by digitizing it for the first time anywhere. The Chicago Defender, like all titles within the ProQuest Historical Newspapers™—Black Newspapers collection, lets researchers:

- Browse complete issues, cover to cover.
- Search by more than 20 article types, keyword, date ranges, specific dates, author, and more.
- Focus on relevant information quickly with hit-term highlighting.

- View news articles, photos, advertisements, classified ads, obituaries, cartoons, and more for added context.
- Print and download articles and images in PDF format.
- Study the progression of issues over time with ProQuest's complete runs of newspapers.

Focus on research instead of the mechanics of finding data.

ProQuest makes it easy for both novice researchers and information professionals to find relevant information quickly, with basic and advanced search options. Searches can be confined to specific article types and dates to focus on the most relevant information. Each newspaper page is zoned into article images, and each newspaper image is supported with searchable ASCII text. Combined, these features mean faster, more effective searches for users. ProQuest digitizes documents at the highest possible resolution to deliver clean, readable images, and highlights search terms to focus readers on the most relevant content.

Researchers can sort their results by oldest, most recent, or most relevant. In addition, stories that originally spanned multiple pages of a newspaper are “threaded” together, appearing as one continuous image and improving readability. Users can view and easily download articles, front pages, photos, display ads, and more in PDF format. The “My Research” summary feature can be used to track recent searches, save articles, email documents, create a bibliography, export citations, and create Web pages.
